Principles and practices of the College of Agricultural Sciences, Oregon State University

Principles that we embrace
- Decisions are built from the ground up.
- It is more important to develop cooperative solutions than to win negotiations.
- Stick to your word.
- Seek the positive interpretation of situations.
- Try to understand the long-term consequences of a decision before making it.
- It is tough to get anything done without taking risks.
- One does not need to manage every detail of a system, but it is important to have a pretty good understanding of the system and why it is there.
- We are committed to honesty, integrity and transparency in all of our dealings.

Practices that we embrace

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Manage our conversations so they are effective</td>
<td>One conversation at a time. One person speaking at a time. Someone managing the conversation. Be clear about the outcomes and the process. Be definitive about closure: Where are we? What happens next?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Listen respectfully and generously</td>
<td>Pay attention to what the person is saying. Allow people to finish. If you have any doubt that you understood, always verify your understanding. Acknowledge—and truly consider—different perspectives. Check for completion: Is this person finished? Is there anything else?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communicate with each other completely</td>
<td>If we aren’t aligned, say so. If something doesn’t work, say so.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Make and keep commitments with one another</td>
<td>Be specific about what the commitments are. Use X by Y (Who will do what by when?) Call if your commitment is in danger of not being fulfilled.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Be on each other’s side</td>
<td>Manage each other’s reputation. Be supportive and helpful. Be inclusive, invite people who may have an interest or may want to contribute. Look out for the interests of our group and our University.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acknowledge and appreciate each other</td>
<td>Look for what can be acknowledged; tell people what you appreciate about them and their work. Practice acknowledgement frequently. Be authentic.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Be aligned on our strategic intent and current projects</td>
<td>If we are not aligned, communicate. If progress slows or stops, acknowledge it. Keep resources and energies focused. Always be looking to stop low-impact programs and activities.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Transparency and sharing information</td>
<td>Ask for what you need. Anticipate what others in the group might want to know. If asked for information, share everything you know.</td>

Our powerful group...

...is made up of people who commit and deliver

...produces results

...respects the individual

...handles disagreements

...has personal energies focused on common good

...manages its reputation

...is clear about decision processes

...is able to declare a "breakdown" and address it

...has conversations about what doesn't work

...is responsible for its effect on the world in which it operates

...calls something a mistake only if we haven’t learned from it

...has fun together
